What's New In Photoshop Free Download For Pc Windows 8.1?

Today, the first time in nearly a decade, I have an extra blog post to share with you. It's about a decision I made this year that will affect some of you reading this blog. I've been involved with the Office of Institutional Research (OIR) for 8 years, and I'm planning to end my career at Drexel, but that doesn't mean I'm leaving the OIR. In fact, after 30 years as an academic I've returned to the world of academia. The research my colleagues and I do at the OIR isn't merely interesting to those working in higher education; it is actually helpful to real-world higher education leaders. For this reason, last year I entered into a consulting agreement with the OIR's new organization, the Office of Academic Affairs, to help our university build its own research center. Although I will no longer be an OIR employee, my consulting work with the OAA does not mean I won't continue to write about the OAA and what we do. My goal is to become a consultant on campus research when not writing about campus research. If you're interested in any of the work we do, I'd love to hear from you. You can contact me at Corey.Keyes@drexel.edu. And if I haven't made it clear already, the reason I'm joining the OAA as a consultant is that I want to remain part of the academic research community. Next year the graduate school will begin its post-doc transition to departmental tenure-track faculty. Many people will move on to other departments, but I hope to remain here to continue building relationships with my colleagues and students. Although not in the OAA, I do think I have something to contribute to the College of Arts and Sciences. Lastly, if you're a member of the Drexel community, I'll continue to write about how the university's higher education researchers can be used by the university. I'll also continue to write about the OAA, and I hope I can continue to share stories about the many people in the organization.
