6: A quick guide to the HTML on the Youtube page - pclark ===== cdr I'd suggest if you want to dig into that, as it's a pretty interesting chunk of code; DOM navigation is basically standard and there's quite a bit of tooling that's used on the html frontend to simplify this to a great degree.

----- jrnkntl That is really cool! I thought html was something people usually avoided in html code.. I thought that was something that only existed in some of the more obscure languages like Lasso.. ----- natrius This is basically the right way to do embedded videos. Before I learned about this, I'd embed videos in the head of HTML files with video.js. Instead, I've embedded them into static pages with this method. Analysis of incongruency and congruency effects in the Stroop task: effect of response set on the Stroop effect. The incongruency and congruency effects in the Stroop color-naming task were measured as a function of response set. Both the size and the direction of the Stroop effects were significantly influenced by response set. The change in these measures was always less than might be expected on the basis of the change in the congruency manipulation. This result led to the following two conclusions: (1) it is possible to produce a large congruency effect on the Stroop task by manipulation of only the response set instruction; (2) the Stroop effect is not in fact captured by either the incongruency or congruency manipulation.

Q: Polymer 1.0 Elements vs paper-element After reading the paper-element documentation, I decided to have a look at Polymer's 1.0 Elements, without really knowing what the differences were. The documentation was as follows: The 1.0 Elements do not generally use the "paper" elements, but instead they base their functionality on the "paper-*" custom elements introduced with Polymer 0.5. The new elements are compiled into the standard web components, meaning they work in both Polymer and vanilla environments.

Questions: What are the drawbacks of the paper-element?
