Field of the Invention The invention relates to a process for the preparation of bisphenol A by the reaction of phosgene with phenol in the presence of a solvent and a catalyst mixture which contains phosphine and a molybdenum catalyst. 2. Discussion of the Background Bisphenol A (2,2-bis(4-hydroxyphenyl)propane or xe2x80x9cbisphenol Axe2x80x9d) is a high-grade, aromatic, colorless solid compound used as a raw material for resin production, dyestuff, adhesives, and pharmaceuticals. A number of known processes for the preparation of bisphenol A are based on the direct synthesis of phenol, which is converted by reaction with phosgene to the bisphenol. One of these known processes involves reaction of bisphenol A with a phosgene-containing gas, using carbon or a metal as the catalyst, in an excess of phenol. The efficiency of the above-described chemical reaction can be enhanced by use of a suitable catalyst. Furthermore, the reaction can be carried out in continuous manner using a fixed-bed reactor or a fluidized-bed reactor. R. G. Chatterji et al. (Ind. Eng. Chem. Prod. Res. Dev., 1983, 22, p. 79) disclose the synthesis of bisphenol A by continuous reaction of phenol with phosgene in the presence of nitrogen, using a fixed-bed reactor. The catalyst used there were heated graphite or silica that had been impregnated with carbon or a metal, and a catalyst mixture in which phosphine is added to the catalyst mixture with ammonium chloride as a carrier. T. G. Lammie et al. (J. Org. Chem., 1984, 49, p. 2716) disclose a process for the preparation of bisphenol A by the reaction of phenol with phosgene, in which a combination of alumina, molecular sieves and phosphine is used as the catalyst. In the processes described above, a carrier is used as the catalyst. These carriers must be dried after impregnation and removed from the product. Furthermore,
