There are some things that I'll never get, but one of them is using bitmap font in any font at all. I've seen where you can try to use bitmaps in Type 1 fonts, and it's actually not that bad, but I've heard people have issues with it. And since I don't have an EULA that I can go sell out of big box store, I'm posting these, because 1) I can, 2) it might help someone, and 3) well, it's only fair if I get them in. If you're a Windows user, you've probably seen these at least a few times, usually in documents from people who are having problems with "theme files". (IE, changing their system theme to something else, and you can't get the document back to the old theme.) And if you've clicked on the "hella" right in the middle of the page and you see that it doesn't make any sense, that's because it makes even less sense once you click the "Okay" button. You see, the point of the little arrows, as well as the little color blocks on them, is so that you can change your theme to another theme without having to reboot your computer. So that if you're working on a document, and the editor decides you're not looking very good, you can click that little arrow down there, and you can switch from the one theme to the one that you want to use (if you want). And if you want to change your theme back to the original, well, it's not that hard, just right click, and change the color back.

Q: Lightning:ActionButton doesn't render when Lightning component is used in a Visualforce page

I am facing an issue with the rendering of lightning:ActionButton. I have a custom Lightning component as described in this answer. I am using the same custom component in a Visualforce page. The problem is that when I try to render a lightning:ActionButton in my VF page, only the classic lightning:icon is shown in that particular button instead of the lightning
