i have worked with all the leading directors in pakistani cinema. the five films i did with sangeeta ghayal, pyaar kiya jaa, yalghaar, love 95 and chor machaye shor are benchmarks in my career. i credit sangeeta with making me a better and a confident actor. pyaar kiya jaa is the most successful film in the history of indian cinema. my heart bleeds for neelam, who broke her wrist during the shooting of chor machaye shor. she was only 22. all these incidents were a big challenge to me. sometimes they had a bearing on the film. but for the most part, they were forgotten. i became much more confident during the shooting of chor machaye shor, thanks to sangeeta and my manager syed mustafa. after working with sheeraz, i wanted to work with him again on befikre. but unfortunately, the project got delayed. i was working on qayamat with the director anamit sagoo. one day, when i was in the showroom of colours, the promotion manager of colours approached me and said that i should work with them. i was very impressed, as a film with a female protagonist is a rarity in our cinema. the film was about a woman in search of her identity and was going to be different from what i had ever made before. i was very excited about the film, but the success of jodha akbar changed my mind. i did not want to go near sangeeta ghayal as this time the success of that film would be my downfall. but for some inexplicable reason, i did agree to do the film. also, i knew that if my films were successful, i could then start thinking about befikre. i had already agreed to do qayamat but had some reservations. for the first time i was working with a woman director, and i was worried. i knew that she was an exceptional filmmaker but she was far from someone who would do justice to a film like befikre. she was good at making small pictures in the genre of swansan, but i was not sure of her experience and ability in making a commercial film. but she turned out to be a terrific director. qayamat was a tremendous success and i am very proud of it. the film has made me a household name and i will always be remembered for it.
